NEW FLAME SNAPS IN TWO

by Brian Reyes

The crippled cargo ship New Flame broke in two following severe weather over the past few days.

The stern section is now detached from the bow and is expected to sink to the seabed in about 27 m of water.

The salvage tug Fotiy Krylov remains at the scene and is attached to the stern section.

Although some light lubricants have spilt into the sea, the New Flames fuel tanks were emptied of heavy oils weeks ago and were sealed shut.

"If there is heavy fuel oil on any beach, it is not from the New Flame," said Chief Minister Peter Caruana, responding to reports of oil on beaches near Algeciras.

Anti pollution resources have been deployed to the scene as a precautionary measure. Spain has offered assistance and specialist tugs should they be needed.

Gibraltar authorities are liaising closely with their Spanish counterparts.

A contract is expected to be awarded before the end of the year to a company that will remove the wreck.

No sure if you've heard but she has sunk quite a bit by the stern.
